

BRILL

Brill Philosophy of Film Series

A very basic style guide

All text in Times New Roman 12 points.

Most important: Use intext citations like (Bazin 1961: 41). Nothing else! At the end, put a bibliography in this style:

Bauman, Zygmunt. 2007. Liquid Times: Living in an Age of Uncertainty. Cambridge: Polity Press.

Bazin, André. 1961. Qu'est-ce que le cinéma? [4 volumes]. Paris: Cerf.

Bazin, André. 2005. What Is Cinema? [2 volumes]. Berkeley: University of California Press.

Benezra, Neal. 2002a. "Raw Materials" in R. Morgan (ed.), Bruce Nauman. Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 23–40.

Bostrom, Nick. 2003. "Are you Living in a Computer Simulation?" in Philosophical Quarterly 53, 144–67.

Use footnotes only when you want to add something to the text. Do not use them for referencing. The intext citation is enough for referencing.

If you quote text in the footnotes, do also only use intext citations like (Bazin 1961: 41).

The intext quotation should come like this:

He is "on the side of death and of all dichotomies because he transcends them" (Le Bot: 6).

Please pay attention to the place of the final quotation marks and the period!

Make subtitles every 3 to 5 pages. The subtitles should be numbered and come in bold.

Longer quotations are indented half an inch.

Translations of texts must be official translations. Only when the text has not been translated can you provide your own translation.

The text must come in perfect English.

If you prepare an entire book, separate the chapters by using section breaks (not simple page breaks). The section break can be found in the layout >> breaks menu. Chose the last option, which is called “odd page” break. Then every chapter will start on an odd page.

Should you have doubts about something, look up a book from the PoF series on google books, for example, Plotinus and the Moving Image by Botz-Bornstein and Stamatellos, which will show you what your book should look like.
